

It's All About Trust

May 13, 2013 12:37 pm EDT

This is what I hear from my wife whenever I leave on a trip that involves an airplane. These are the last words from her mouth when we part. I wish she wouldn't say that, because I can't think of a response that would leave her feeling comfortable. So I just grin and nod my head to acknowledge her. The only words I can think of to say are these: "I'll make sure to buckle my seat belt." "I'll be sure that my tray table is raised and locked." "I'll have my seat in its upright position." Those are the only things that are in my control as an airline passenger...
