

Testing Facility Management for GLP Testing

May 14, 2013 1:48 pm EDT

Testing facility management is the person(s) who has the authority and formal responsibility for the organization and functioning of the testing facility according to the principles of good laboratory practice A testing facility will have three levels of management: facility management, study personnel, and quality assurance program staff The US Food and Drug Administration has stipulated that the quality assurance unit shall be entirely separate from and independent of the personnel engaged in the direction and conduct of that study Qualifications and responsibilities of management are...
