

Validation Report Conclusion—Is It Validated?

May 13, 2013 9:47 am EDT

The specific problem described involves only one sentence—the conclusion drawn from the test results in the validation protocol. Writers of validation documents often do not write a clear concluding statement. The absence of a specific sentence that states the process, equipment, or utility is validated renders the validation document incomplete. The validation document is deficient in a meaningful final conclusion for the validation project. This discussion addresses the following: Problem. The specific problem is discussed. Consequences. What can happen if this...
